- Las Vegas Fun Facts -

Harrah's

Carnaval Court is named after the world's largest party held annually in Brazil, Carnaval; thus spelled with an "a" instead of an "i."

Winnie and Buck, the couple immortalized in the sculpture at Harrah's Las Vegas, are a real couple who came to Vegas to hit it big and did!

Flamingo

When Bugsy Siegel opened the Flamingo in 1946, he named it after his long-legged, redhead girlfriend Virginia Hill when he opened it in 1946.

Spanning over 15 acres, the pool area and wildlife habitat at Flamingo is one of the largest on The Strip and home to flamingos, cranes, swans, carp, koi, and at least another dozen specials of exotic animals.

The Flamingo recently introduced their Flamingo GO Rooms and GO Pool, both derivatives of the word Flamin- GO

Rio

Themed after the city of Rio de Janeiro in Brazil, the Rio All-Suite Hotel & Casino is unlike any other hotel and casino in the world.

With daily Mardi Gras parades that include floats hanging from the ceiling and live casino entertainment, guests will feel just like they're in Brazil. The Rio features 2,563 hotel suites

Paris

Paris Las Vegas features authentic replicas of famous French landmarks, including the Arc de Triomphe and the Hôtel de Ville, as well as façades of the Paris Opera House and The Louvre

Paris Las Vegas' Arc de Triomphe is a two-thirds replica of the original, which opened in 1805 as a monument to the soldiers who fought in the Battle of Austerlitz.

Bally's

Bally's Las Vegas is one of the strip's most elegant and exciting resorts, offering guests a "classic Las Vegas" experience and encompassing more than 3.2 million square feet of public space

Jubilee! The show has a $3 million opening number, complete with superb computerized sets, surround sound music, special effects, lights, sound, choreography and costumes by world-renown designers Bob Mackie and Pete Menefee. More than 1,000 costumes are worn during the show. The original cost for the costumes was $3.5 million, and 26 people work in wardrobe, keeping the costumes in excellent shape.

Caesars Palace

Caesar is widely considered to be one of the foremost military geniuses of all time, as well as a brilliant politician and one of the ancient world's strongest leaders

The Statue of David by: Michelangelo

- Location: Appian way shops and in front of Caesars.
- Facts: This of course is one of the most famous sculptures in the world. The original sculpture stands nearly two stories high. The amazing thing about this is that Michelangelo accounted for this size and viewing point and made the statue the perfect male figure to view, when in fact if the statue were shrunk down it would be very disproportional. David of course became king of Israel and slew the giant Goliath with his sling shot.

Caesars Palace is proud to announce a partnership with acclaimed Chef and chocolatier François Payard. Located adjacent to hot-spot Rao's restaurant, Payard Pâtisserie & Bistro at Caesars Palace will take an effervescent and whimsical, yet upscale, approach to the classic neighborhood pastry shop found throughout Paris' Left Bank.

"My restaurant at Caesars Palace will recreate the atmosphere, elegance and cuisine that I currently have in my New York pâtisserie, but there will be a few surprises that make this place truly one-of-a-kind." said Payard.

Rich and vibrant colors will dominate the space as hand-crafted woodwork, crystal, blown glass and leather banquettes complete the restaurant's elegant feel. Within the Pâtisserie will be three unique areas for guests to experience. A specialty goods station where freshly prepared chocolates, candies, pastries and breads will be arranged in glass display cases. Coffee/liquor/panini bar serving breakfast, lunch, dinner; and late-night offerings will be served to guests on the go. Guests will have the ability to enjoy more traditional table service in the restaurant's dining room that is centered by an open-air kitchen. Caesars Palace has reached an agreement with principals of the Rao's Restaurant Group, LLC, to bring to Las Vegas the one-and-only Rao's, the 110-year old, 10-table, East Harlem Italian restaurant that is the ultimate New York dinner reservation "get." Slated to open in late 2006, Rao's will move into the space formerly occupied by Terrazza at Caesars Palace and will be re-created by the Engstrom Design Group of San Rafael, Calif., to capture the intimate, convivial, speak-easy style of the original, located at 455 East 114th Street.

Rao's is a culinary national treasure. Widely acclaimed for its authentic, southern Neapolitan Italian cooking and its home-style family ambiance, Rao's was honored with a pinnacle three stars from New York Times restaurant critic Mimi Sheraton, who describes the cuisine, "exquisitely simple Italian cooking."

Rao's is known as one of the country's oldest family-owned and-run restaurant in its original locations, and its southern Italian cuisine sings with freshness, authenticity, flavor and love.

Rao's serves and satiates some of the most powerful appetites in the world. Legions of politicians, sports figures and matinee idols have jockeyed for a reservation. Indeed, there is a reason why the only way to get a seat at this legendary restaurant is if you are a regular and have "table rights" or if you're lucky enough to be invited as a guest by someone who does. RUB BBQ is a rare find of slow cooking in a fast-paced town. RUB BBQ has had much success in New York City, where Wall Street professionals, celebrities and casual diners all enjoy RUB's slow-cooked meats and sides. Now, Las Vegas can also enjoy some of RUB BBQ's extraordinary, award-winning barbecue.

RUB has an urban-rust feel and earth-toned color palette. There aren't a lot of decorations, pictures, murals or anything extraneous on the walls. At first glance, you could dismiss RUB as just another Las Vegas restaurant. But that's where you would be wrong---horribly wrong.

At RUB Las Vegas, your meal is cooked for hours in one of seven, industrial-grade, wood burning, 200-degree ovens (a truly amazing sight). The table is adorned with four different kinds of sauce so you can have your barbecue just the way you like it. But surprisingly enough, the secret to barbecue is not just in the sauce or the cooking. "The key to good barbecue is knowing when to take it off," says Fischel. If this is the case, Skip Steele, Pitmaster of RUB Las Vegas, has impeccable timing.

RUB serves up truly "braggadocious" barbecue. But with that boasting, comes the stuff to back it up. "We want to do it right every time," says Chef Kirk. Doing things "right" includes prepping the barbecue selections fresh daily. That means if the restaurant runs out of a certain item, it's an excuse to go back the next day!

The mixture of Chef Kirk's high standards and fresh ingredients makes RUB what it is: a great barbecue restaurant that brings a little soul to Las Vegas.

The Wine Cellar showcases some 50,000 bottles valued at more than $10 million. The Wine Cellar matured wine vault is filled with hard to find "cult wine" like multiple vintages of California's Napa Valley Cabernet Sauvignon in 18 liter bottles! The shelves are filled with highly collectible labels from around the world such as Italy's Sassicaia or Australia's Penfold's Grange. Of course the Wine Cellar has a fantastic selection of everyday wines too.

After 15 successful years in Ft. Lauderdale – Café Martorano has opened a second location in Las Vegas at the Rio Hotel

The key to understanding Steve Martorano may lie in his devotion to Frank Sinatra. Old blue eyes was known for a credo of “Doing it my way.” Steve has taken that philosophy to heart, staying true to his vision through and through. And it’s done him just fine. Steve Martorano was born into a strong Italian family in Philadelphia in 1957. It was through his heritage and his home that he began his Italian-American cooking style. Side-by-side with family members, Steve learned the flavors and philosophies of food. Staying true to this foundation and continuing to perfect his craft on his own, and according to his own terms, Steve has taken Italian-American cooking to new levels.

In 1993, with the encouragement of family and friends propelling him along, Steve moved his business to South Florida. There, he took an 800 square foot space with eight tables and opened Café Martorano, turning his passion for Italian-American food into one of the most exciting dining experiences in the country.

He added music. He loves food, he loves music. – He’s the chef and he’s the DJ, and he can caramelize an onion and play “My Way” in hip-hop tempo. The play list is awesome. And it changes as the waiting crowd changes from early hours to late.

Steve has successfully transferred his vision of how the restaurant business should be into the South Florida mega-scene. Along the way, he has managed to remain loyal to his “Italian guy from the neighborhood” philosophy while still providing the high level of service demanded by some of the nation’s most hardened diners.

Over the past fifteen years, Café Martorano has grown from 800 square feet to a 3,000 square foot restaurant with fourteen tables and a long bar. Steve’s impeccable food and Café Martorano’s topline club ambience attracts some of the hottest celebrities from the entertainment and sports world – Ludicris, Ja Rule, Ashanti, Shaquille O’Neal, Matt Damon and the entire cast of the “Sopranos” to name a few.

There are no reservations. Diners put their faith in Steve to provide the best and have been waiting in line every night for the past thirteen years. Café Martorano has consistently received top ratings from Zagat’s Survey Guide as well as being listed as the top restaurant in Gold Coast magazine and Fort. Lauderdale magazine. In February 2005, Steve’s meatballs won the ‘Most Like Mama’s’ award at the South Beach Wine & Food Festival. In 2005 and 2006, Café Martorano was awarded the Wine
